

City's Social Life

THE GAYETIES AND ACTIVITIES OF THE WEEK

The Wedding March.

Softly, softly, stir the chorus,
Linger by the altar door,
Tenderly along the aisle
Let the golden music steal.
Hush, she comes, the radiant bride,
Swell the glorious tones with pride,
See, her veil about her face,
Thrill the gentle minor notes.

Every heart is here this day,
Flowers before her feet are cast,
Stepping on her maiden way,
Stepping from her sheltered past.
May the years before her be
Full of bliss and loyalty,
May she whom she takes to her
Guard her with her husband's power.
—By Margaret Sangster.

Girls of the Period.

Elliott Gregory, in the Century.

While visiting recently in a neighboring city I was placed at dinner next to a diminutive damsel who entertained me during the meal with her opinions on men and matters. The talk had a subterranean of the strong-minded, oddity out of keeping with her winsome face and doll-like figure, but the face was so pretty and the chatter so amusing that after a time one forgot this disagreeable impression. Later in the evening, when the other guests had left, I asked my hostess who the energetic little maiden was. With a half smile she answered: "Miss B— is a very modern person. I thought you would find her interesting. A couple of years ago her parents, who I suspect, had begun to find their offspring a handful, yielded to the daughter's request to go abroad and finish her education, naively imagining that she would settle in some quiet old town like Dresden or Hanover. A relative was chosen as a duenna, a bank account opened and the couple started with the understanding that their destination should be decided by the girl herself. Well, you will think I am romancing when I tell you that, after a month in Paris and a tentative week at Cannes, Miss B— established herself at Monte Carlo for the winter. It is needless to add that her education was finished with a vengeance, not quite on the lines her parents had intended, but with staggering completeness. When she got back from this eventful journey the traveler proceeded to give her parents the benefit of her experience. They were hustled no less volens out of a suburban home and established in a town house, as their daughter announced that she had no intention of wasting her life in the country. Having accomplished this feat and furnished the new residence with pictures and bric-a-brac picked up during her trip abroad, hired a couple of servants and made out a visiting list for her mother's use, the girl, who was not prepared to marry just yet, next turned her attention to the parental investments, upon which she brought the light of her new ideas to bear. "I faut être de son siècle," is her favorite saying. When the family money matters were running on her satisfaction Miss B—, nothing if not active, devoted her time to organizing a kennel for the breeding of bulldogs of an particular form or color, I forget which. "A woman," she says, "must have some serious object in life," and she urged me that the way this special breed has been allowed to run down over here is a disgrace to the American people. Fortunately for us, she has leaped into the breach and proposes to raise the standard, at no matter what personal inconvenience, to the English level. It appears that Minotaur, the famous five-thousand-dollar prize winner, is on his way across the ocean to join her.

This girl may or may not be a fair sample of her kind, but that there are hundreds of households in our land to which her parents, from indolence or ignorance, are allowing themselves to be run by their daughters is certain. It is also self-evident that in all classes of society, except certain conservative circles where continental standards are observed, the Yankee girl has seized the helm. With father and mother comfortably installed in the cabin and male members of the crew forbidden even to approach the bridge, she is guiding the family bark, summer and winter, according to her pleasure.

Episode in a Bachelor's Life.

From "Nancy and I and the Girl."

I caught her and held her fast. We sank down together into a deep chair. The girl was watching us merrily. Nancy gurgled with delight.

"Please, giant, let me go home to my mother," she pined.

"Never!" I thundered, with a sudden idea, born of the girl's look. "Will you have performed my best?"

"What's that?" asked Nancy naively.

"This," said I, and whispered in her ear. "Exactly in the middle," said she.

"Now, quick! Put your hand over it, so it can't get away."

Nancy flashed from my arms to the girl. She put it exactly in the middle.

There is a color that the sails of ships take on in the early dawn of a perfect day. I have never seen it but twice. The other time was on a ship.
